Catherine Ashton, the High Representative of the Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy and Vice-President of the Commission made the following statement:

"I deeply deplore the tragic loss of lives in Moscow this morning, when explosions in the metro at rush hour killed close to 40 people and wounded many. I would like to express my profound sympathies, condolences and support to the families of the victims, their loved ones, and to the people of Russia."