First Anniversary of the Jan 25 Revolution

On the first anniversary of Egypt's January 25 Revolution Egyptians expect, look forward and also worry.

The Egyptian media and press have devoted their pages and channels to cover the preparations and plans for the first anniversary of their much honored revolution that overthrew former president Mubarak and his regime.

While the Muslim Brotherhood, Salafists and part of the public want to celebrate the first anniversary of the revolution, other players like the revolutionary coalitions and another part of the public announced the day to be a restart and an announcement of revising the revolution that they think has been stolen and has not completely overthrow the old regime. This last group of Egyptians are planning sit-ins and protests and have demands on the top of which a soon handover of the political power to a civil authority.

Al-Ahram published a lengthy coverage of the planned rallies, celebrations and protests.

On its front page, al-Ahram headlined: "Millions flock to squares to celebrate freedom and dignity."

In his speech on the occasion Egypt's Mufti Ali Gomaa hailed the youth as Egypt's treasure and stressed the importance of providing them with the appropriate qualifications that can enable them to "lead the nation."

On his part, Muhammad al-Baradei, the former presidential candidate who withdrew lately said that dialogue between the revolutionaries, the Parliament and SCAF was the key to national agreement.

Potential Presidential Candidate Amr Mussa, former secretary general of the Arab League stressed the compelling need to overcome all disagreements in order to protect the revolution and realize its goals.

Abd al-Munim Abu al-Futuh, another potential presidential candidate asserted that the revolution was still continuing until it achieves its goals.

In an electoral conference he held in Mansoura, Abu al-Futouh warned of the “revolution enemies” who wanted to replace Mubarak’s regime with a similar one.

Another Potential Presidential Candidate Hamadsain Sabbahi called for a demonstration in Dawaran Shubra. Sabbahi said that the 25 revolution could overthrow the head of the regime, and that the revolution should continue to realize all its goals, calling on Egyptians to demonstrate in squares in order to realize the revolution goals.

Head of al-Wafd Party called on all the political players to cooperate in order to organize a celebration that is up to the great value of the occasion.

Al-Ahram reported on big rallies in Alexandria where 86 parties and political movements are planning to fill the city’s streets. Human shields will be formed to protect the demonstrators.

Rallies are to be organized in all Egyptian provinces.

A group of revolution youth has met members of SCAF who confirmed SCAF’s commitment to handover the political power by June 30. SCAF confirmed the support it had offered for establishing new parties after the revolution.

Amidst celebrations and intentions to revive the revolution, al-Ahram reported on politicians’ and humanitarian activists’ worries of the potential bad development of the situation.

Al-Ahram’s Hatem Muhsim and Muhammad Foudah reported on Egyptians’ fears of potential repetition of riots and violence.

Wajih al-Saqqar reported on some revolution coalitions’ doubts about the intentions of SCAF. These coalitions believe that the head of the regime was gone but not its fellows. The government resorted to debts and did not care about restoring the smuggled money in a persisting absence of social justice.

Spokesman of the 6 of April Movement Salim Saad declared that the movement would participate in the rallies to call for realizing the revolution goals. Saad confirmed the movement's rejection to any riots or violent acts that tarnish the revolutionaries' image.

Emergency law Lifted

In a speech given on the occasion of the first anniversary of January 25 revolution, Field Marshal Hussein Tantawi, head of SCAF declared that the emergency law would be lifted as from Thursday morning.

Tantawi asserted that the Armed forces had never deviated from the way towards realizing the revolution goals. He also asserted SCAF keenness to consult all the political players and the revolution youth to manage the transitional period. Tantawi also asserted that the Armed forces would never be reluctant in frustrating any attempt to destabilize the nation. Tantawi also expressed his confidence in the People’s Assembly.

Trying al-Adli

Former Minister of Interior Habib Al-Adly’s defense Issam al-Battawi claimed that the Muslim Brotherhood (MB) coordinated with the State Security about its participation in the demonstrations on the 25 and 28 of January, 2011. He added that the MB agreed with the State Security to be present in Tahrir with small numbers to preserve its image before people.

However, MB did not keep their promises and participated with great number.

The al-Battawi added that about 70- 90 foreign elements sneaked amongst the public and created disorder and riots. He said he would present documents that prove the U.S.A, Israel and Qatar’s involvement in the riots.

Al-Battawi also projected CDs depicting civilians while assaulting and stripping Central Security officers with guns.

On the other hand, Mubarak’s defense Farid al-Dib left to Beirut in a sudden trip.

The same news was reported in all the newspapers of today without exceptions.

The First Anniversary of the January 25 Revolution

Al-Masry al-Yom reported on the preparations for the first anniversary of the Egyptian revolution.

The revolution coalitions have set up tents and stages and formed public committees to protect the rally. Special rehearsals were also made for the chants.

Demonstrators will also carry symbolic coffins that represent the martyrs. Operation rooms were established and secret cameras installed to record any possible violations or attacks.

The government also took security measures at prisons and public facilities. The jailed at police stations were transferred to prisons.

Yomna Mukhtar reported on a women's demonstration that is to start from Mustapha Mahmoud Square towards Tahrir Square. The demonstration calls for resuming the revolution.

In a forum held at the Cairo book fair, political activist Shadi Ghazali Harb called on Egyptians to take part in the protesting rallies on January 25. Harb asserted that there were strong evidences that the armed forces were involved in killing demonstrators.

The Muslim Brotherhood took the responsibility of securing the celebration of the first anniversary of the revolution in Tahrir Square. Salafist al-Nour Party, however seems to be still considering taking part in the sit-ins.

Dr. Jawdah Abd al-Khaliq, minister of supply and internal trade described the calls of overthrow SCAF as “vain.”

Dr. al-Sayyid al-Badawi, head of al-Wafd Party will participate in the rally to continue the revolution and honor the martyrs.

Pro-SCAF players called for a rally to honor the Armed Forces, the honorable police officers and the martyrs’ families.

Rallies are to be organized in all Egyptian governorates.

On the international level, 150 Egyptian Embassies and Consulates celebrate the first anniversary of the revolution too. Youth diplomats lit the Foreign Ministry’s premises with office lights reading “25 January Revolution,” in Arabic.

Al-Akhbar Coverage of the First Session of the People's Assembly

For the second day the People's Assembly sessions are in the center of the media spotlight in Egypt.

Al-Akhbar's front page marked the first revolution anniversary, SCAF's decision to lift the emergency law starting Thursday early morning, and the first session of the People's Assembly.

The first session, that started one hour late, witnessed furious anger against former president Mubarak and all those who were involved in killing demonstrators. The Parliament called for a political trial for Mubarak and for transferring him to Tora Prison.

MPs called for death penalty against Mubarak and all figures of his regime who were involved in killing demonstrators.

MPs criticized the absence of Prime Minister Kamal Ganzouri from the session. Speaker of the People's Assembly Saad al-Katatni summoned PM Ganzouri and the ministers of Interior, Justice and Health to discuss the compensations to be granted for the revolution victims.

The People's Assembly issued a communiqué to be distributed on people in Tahrir Square on the first anniversary of the revolution.

The communiqué includes a number of suggestions like forming a revolution court to try Mubarak and the symbols of his regime, transferring Mubarak from the hospital to Tura Prison, assuring the handover of power to an elected civil authority.

Muslim Brotherhood MP Akram al-Shaer wept while remembering the injury of his son during the revolution, expressing his compassion with the parents and families of the martyrs for their irreparable losses. Al-Shaer emotions moved the other MPs.

The parliament members rejected the Mubarak Hall name in the People's Assembly premises and wanted to change it to the Jan 25 Hall.

Speaker al-Katatni declared that a committee would be formed to amend the people's Assembly internal bylaws of the People's Assembly to suit the "revolution parliament."

Dr. Saad al-Katatni decided to delete a statement by MP Muhammad Imarah from the session minutes. MP Imarah had referred to the United States as a state of infidelity. Imarah retracted his speech, and al-Katatni decided to delete the statement from the minutes.

MP al-Ulaimi called on the Armed Forces and the government to secure the 25 Jan rallies.

MP Issam Sultan of al-Wassat Party called the government to react to the Israeli attacks against Prophet Joseph tomb in Palestine's Nablus.

The specialized committees of the people's Assembly were supposed to be elected yesterday. However, Dr. al-Katatni announced postponing voting to Tuesday.

MPs could not agree on the assembly's specialized committees. A number of al-Wafd party's MPs announced their withdrawal from the voting process. MPs of the Free Egyptians party, al-Tajammu Party, al-Wasat party and the Democratic Egyptian Party also expressed their discontentment. The withdrawal and discontentment were in protest to having all nominees belong to two parties.

MP Saad Abboud called for forming a committee to interrogate members of the Intelligence Apparatus for the reluctance in providing the evidence that condemn “the former corrupt regime.”

In a related context, the Azhar Grand Imam Ahmad al-Tayyib and pope Shenouda, Patriarch of Alexandria and the Saint Marc See sent telegrams to congratulate Dr. al-Katatni for the Speaker’s position.

SCAF Approves a Presidential Elections Law

SCAF has approved the presidential elections law after implementing a number of amendments to the draft. The law is passed after four amendments have been implemented upon a Supreme Constitutional Court.

The first amendment was to grant the first vice president of the Supreme Constitutional Court the authority to head the High Presidential Elections Commission in the absence of the president of the Constitutional Court.

The second amendment, however, was to grant the political parties who are represented in the parliament the right to nominate one of their members in case of the death or withdrawal of their nominee.

The third amendment was to grant the presidential commission the right to establish guarantees that every eligible voter votes only one time.

Eligible voters vote with their national ids, and phosphoric ink is used as mark of voting.

In another context, SCAF has not passed the contestation law that had been approved by the government against the authenticity of a number of MP's membership in the People's Assembly. SCAF referred the draft law to be discusses in the People's Assembly. The draft law makes contestations against the elections results part of the authorities of the Cassation Court who is to consider the field contestations within 60 days. Its rulings will be executed immediately.

Ahmed Saleh: Anyone who watches the parliaments of real democratic states will know that the altercations in the People's Assembly are not something to be ashamed of.

Tomorrow, we will all go to Tahrir Square... not to call on the Army to leave... not to undermine Egypt's interests... we believe that the revolution is peaceful... we reject any attacks on people or on public or private property... tomorrow, we want SCAF to leave democratically... we want the Egyptian Army to quit the political life for the first time in sixty years and to let the people decide their own fate through the elections without giving privileges to any quarter. We respect the historic role of the military institution in defending Egypt's soil... tomorrow; we will call for the election of a new president in April before the constitution is drafted, as stipulated in the constitutional amendments on which a referendum was held on March 14, 2011. Honor to the martyrs. The revolution continues.

Please, stay away from police stations, military zones and vital institutions during the marches and protests... please, avoid any brawls that could develop into clashes... please, handle quietly and rationally any suspicious elements, which could have infiltrated the protesters to turn them against each other or incite them to commit violent acts. Peacefulness is a moral choice and is the revolution's distinguished trait.

I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully preserve the principles of the 25 January Revolution and will do the best of my ability to achieve its goals and maintain its peacefulness; work for the revolution's victims; respect the will and choice of the Egyptian people; guard honestly the freedom, dignity and pride of Egypt and its people; and resist injustice, suppression and corruption as long as I live.

After moments, we will publish a video about the first 100 protesters who gathered in Mostafa Mahmoud Square on January 25, 2011. It will be posted for the first time.

Why don't you just be patient for another six months, it's not a big deal! What does it mean to elect a president before the constitution, who will determine the president's powers? You are creating a new tyranny! Why are you insisting on forcing your opinion? Egyptian Cabinet

Head of the Egyptian Tax Authority: Income tax departments are ready to receive tax reports for 2011. The forms are available on the authority's portal.

The Egyptian Exchange: Stock market gains EGP 6.6 billion and main index up 3.03% amid a state of optimism with the start of the first post-revolution parliament session.

The government decided to withdraw lands from unserious investors in the industrial zone of East Port Said. The investors have violated contractual terms signed with the government in 1998. Under the contract, the investors should have built factories and established projects on these lands in the past ten years.

Cairo governor inspected a number of neighborhoods in the southern area, including Al-Maasara, Tora, Al-Tebein and 15th of May. The governor instructed head of the supply directorate to pump more butane gas cylinders into those areas to resolve the gas crisis. The move should be carried out in coordination with the police and traffic police to prevent smuggling Cairo's quota to Giza and other adjacent governorates.

Field Marshal Hussein Tantawi delivers a speech on the Egyptian Television.

Suez security director: Number of police forces to be doubled in the governorate on the first anniversary of the revolution. Al-Arbaeen Square will be under the guard of the revolutionaries.

The People's Assembly agreed to form a fact-finding commission over the revolution's victims. The commission is made up of Deputy Speaker Ashraf Thabet with the membership of heads of the parliament's constitutional, legislative, defense, national security, religious affairs, health, environmental and human rights committees. The heads of those committees will be elected next Tuesday along with representatives of parliamentary blocs.

Wael Abbas:

We have turned into Iran!! An MP said America is the state of infidelity!!! Those who elected you shall rotten in hell!!!

Tantawi has lifted the emergency state just like he did when he halted military trials!!!

Source: a member staff at Wael el-Arashi's show told him we want to interview by phone the "Liars Movement" in New York, he told her I am against those who curse Egypt abroad!!! Stupid, stupid, stupid.

I hate those who meddle into a conversation and change the subject of the discussion.

The atmosphere in the square is fine despite mud ponds.

The Muslim Brotherhood is intercepting anti-SCAF chants and shouting "Allah is Great."

The Muslim Brotherhood has erected a large ugly platform but they will reportedly dismantle it.

People are telling me the Muslim Brotherhood has chanted "the Army and people are one hand", but personally, I have not heard anything.

What is going on in Abbasiya?

The Abbasiya feud is between two large families.

The vendors in Tahrir Square are absurd. They are acting as if they are the big event and we are just stalling them.

The Muslim Brotherhood is liars. It is not dismantling the platform; it brought large speakers and installing them now!!!

The Army deployed large reinforcements outside Maspero. I captured them on video.

The sun is shining and warm, unlike yesterday.

Shame on the media. It is reporting that MPs Hamzawi and Nagar are leading marches in Nasr City and Heliopolis. Hamzawi is not fit to be leader but a pimp!!!

Dear new tweeps, why are most of you ignorant and lame??? Please shut up and watch and learn!!!

The Muslim Brotherhood platform has reportedly collapsed in Tahrir. I am not there to confirm the news.

Arabist:

Thuggery exception seems aimed at protesters. But at least difficult to apply to political meetings, NGOs, warrants for wiretaps, much else.

I reject the centrality in international media discourse of #jan25. It started in Tunis and #jan14 is the first toppling.

Gsquare86:

The march is bigger than any other day of the revolution #Jan25.. this is the highest number of people out <http://twitpic.com/8bgzo7>

Hundreds of thousands of Egyptians are out on the street chanting "we demand the downfall of the regime"

Unbelievable numbers, this is the highest numbers of protesters on the streets in the history of Egypt #Jan25 2012.

#Giza march is now in Dokki St. and it seems all streets are so packed that we can hardly move forward.

This is the endless sea of people #Jan25 on Dokki St #Giza <http://twitpic.com/8bh3vh>

I am now on Kasr El Nile Bridge

Good morning revolution, a year on and you are getting more and more beautiful.

Iyad elbaghdadi:

You can respect someone without agreeing with them. And vice-versa, btw.

Today, we are all Egyptians.

The Egyptian Revolution is the longest in the #ArabSpring. It started in #Jan25 2011, and is not over yet.

I still remember tweeting like crazy this time last year. I had 50-something followers back then.

I wish I wasn't busy today. I want to tweet like crazy just like on #Jan25.

It's not over.
