MB Leader Visits Pope in Cathedral for First Time

The Supreme Guide of the Muslim Brotherhood Group Mohamed Badaa visited Patriarch of the Sea of Saint Mark Pope Shenouda III at the Cathedral on Wednesday.

It is the first time in the history of the MB since its establishment such a visit takes place.

Badaa was inquiring after the health of the pope, who underwent a spinal surgery recently.

MB Member Makes “Informal” Visit of Qatar

The deputy of the supreme guide of the Muslim Brotherhood group Khayrat el-Shater made an “informal” visit of Qatar three days ago, where he met with high-level officials, Al-Masry Al-Yom learned.

During his stay, Shater met with Emir Hamad bin Khalifa al-Thani, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Hamad bin Jassem, MB official sources said.

Sources said that Shater had said his visit was in response to an invitation from the Qatari side.

Shater had discussed with the Qatari officials aid to Egypt, especially after the developments of the NGOs case, sources, who asked to remain anonymous, said.

Important Decisions Taken by Cabinet of Ministers

Cabinet of Ministers, headed by Prime Minister Dr. Kamal El-Ganzouri, held a meeting yesterday and issued a number of important decisions.

The cabinet ratified the draft law which organizes medical insurance given to women supporting their families. The cabinet also took a number of decisions in projects related to sanitation, sugar factories, and petro-chemical works.

The cabinet discussed the impact of cutting subsidies to the industries relying on extensive use of energy such as ceramics and iron factories.

Also, the cabinet agreed on a draft law which aims to establish a national council for the handicapped to provide support and services to over 12 million handicapped.

Foreign Suspects Travel: A Slap in the Face for Egypt

The decision to release US suspects, who are accused in the NGOs case, evoked great anger in the Egyptian society. Many political parties and forces demanded trying all those who were involved in this deal.

Dr. Ashraf Balba', political advisor to Al-Wafd Party, confirmed that allowing US suspects to travel to their country was not necessarily a deal but an indicator to the state of confusion which characterizes the entire transitional period.

Sameh Rashed, political analyst, said SCAF and Minister of International Cooperation Fayza Aboul Naga are responsible for this case. He criticized ignoring the public opinion and lack of transparency after the revolution. Releasing suspects could have been done away from the judicial system, which was undermined to a great extent, he stressed.

Islamists Disagree Over Coalition Government

News reporting that MB is discussing the formation of a coalition government that includes all parliamentary political forces surfaced after FJP, the political arm of the Muslim Brotherhood, commenced the procedures of withdrawing confidence from El-Ganzouri's government.

Al-Gama'a Al-Islamiyah is willing to join this government only if it is formed after the transitional period transitional, said Aboud El-Zomor, member of Al-Gama'a Shura Council.

Al-Nour and Al-Asala parties lean towards giving the interim government the chance to continue in office until June.

Talaat Marzou', member of Al-Nour's Parliamentary committee, denied any negotiations with the MB regarding the formation of a coalition government. He added that the party's final stance would be announced on Sunday through the response of Sayed Mostafa, head of Al-Nour's parliamentary bloc, to the government's statement before the People's Assembly.

Aboul-Fotouh: No Immunity for Those Who Killed Egyptians

Potential presidential candidate Abd El-Moneim Abul-Fotouh stated that the military council will return to its barracks after the end of the transitional period to end its political role completely.

He assured that no immunity would protect anyone who participated in killing Egyptians.

He stated that the NGOs case was merely a political charade that held no meaning and was totally unjustified.

Administrative Court Eliminates Decision to Refer Thugs to Military Prosecution

“No civilian should be tried before military courts even if they were accused of committing acts of thuggery,” this was the decision issued by the Supreme Administrative Court yesterday. The Administrative Court overruled Field Marshal Mohamed Hussein Tantawi’s decree according to which thugs were referred to military prosecution.

The court justified its decision by saying that referring civilians to military courts, based on Article 48 of the Code of Military Justice, represents a threat to their right to be tried before a civilian court.

The court explained that the decree cannot be justified because the military court will be both the judge and the opponent at the same time. Also, Tantawi’s decree violates the Egyptian Constitution which gives citizens the right to stand before civilian courts.

Fouda, Al-Aswani, Ishak and Ghoneim Referred to Military Court

Every day more political activists and intellectuals are referred to military or civilian courts under the pretexts of incitement, insulting the military institution and creating strife.

Public Prosecution referred the complaints filed by 712 persons against 14 political and media figures to military prosecution.

A judicial source, who preferred not to be named, revealed that complaints include charges of incitement to dismantle the state, insult the army and the military council, and create strife. The complaint said that those figures contributed in tarnishing Egypt's image by publishing false news in their TV programs or in newspapers.

The 14 persons facing charges include revolutionary figures such as: Yosri Fouda, Alaa Al-Aswani, Zeyad Al-Eleimy, George Ishak, Wael Ghoneim, Asmaa Mahfouz and many others.

The source confirmed that the complaints are being examined by the military prosecution and investigation will begin within the next few days.

The question now is: Will the military prosecution put these complaints into effect and open a gate of hell on the freedom of opinion and expression? Or will they decide not to press charges because these are rhetorical complaints not supported by any evidence?

Policeman Facing Death Sentence Exonerated Of Killing Protesters

Cairo's criminal court has cleared low-ranking policeman Ibrahim Abdel-Monem, also known as Mohmamed El-Sunni, as well as Officers Alaa Abdel Razak and Hazem El-Kholy, of murder and attempted murder during the January Revolution.

They were accused of killing two protesters and attempting to murder two more during the height of the revolution on 28 January 2011, which is known as the Friday of Rage.

Last June El-Sunni faced the death sentence in another case that saw him convicted of killing 18 protesters at Al-Zawia Al-Hamra police station, also on the Friday of Rage.

April 6: Al-Azhar Document a Constitutional Guideline

The April 6 Youth Movement (Ahmed Maher’s Front) demanded that the document issued by Al-Azhar is used as a guideline for drafting the constitution. The movement considered Al-Azhar the only neutral religious institution that carries no political agenda.

“The Constituent Assembly concerned with drafting the constitution should represent all hues of the political spectrum and society classes,” said the movement’s statement yesterday.

Al-Azhar document has encompassed a number of principles, such as supporting the establishment of the modern democratic constitutional national state, which relies on a constitution accepted by all.

Sources inside the Supreme Presidential Elections Commission stated that allegations that member Abd El-Moez Ibrahim, head of Cairo’s Appeals Court, had attempted to affect the court examining the NGOs case are totally baseless.

Article 28 of the constitutional declaration states that the head of the Appeals Court must be a member in the Presidential Elections Commission. This makes it impossible to realize demands of dismissing him from the commission.

Al-Silmi Expects the Army Intervention

Al-Yom al-Sabei reported on the different options being discussed by SCAF to resolve the conflicts about the foundation of the Constituent assembly that will be assigned to draft the Constitution.

There are public fears of Islamists’ dominance in the assembly after the parliament suggestion to choose 40-60 % of the assembly members from the parliament.

Dr. Ali al-Silmi who set the so-called the Silmi document; which is a document of constitutional principles, expected the Armed Forces intervention in the issue to preserve the nation’s stability.

Al-Silmi said the current plan to form the assembly implies an Islamist dominance.
