Following our meetings last month, and based on the framework for the negotiations established in February, we have now held substantive and detailed discussions covering all the issues which will need to be part of a Comprehensive Agreement.

A lot of intensive work will be required to overcome the differences which naturally still exist at this stage in the process.

We will now move to the next phase in the negotiations in which we will aim to bridge the gaps in all the key areas and work on the concrete elements of a possible Comprehensive Agreement.

Our next meeting will be in Vienna from 13 May 2014."
