Message from the Chairman

A guiding principle of Lisbon Treaty provisions is the desire to achieve an adequate EU action during external emergencies, which requires ad hoc decision making.

Ensuring a coherent response to crises is part of the EU’s wider efforts in its external relations, in close cooperation with the Member States, to turn the ‘comprehensive approach’ into comprehensive action.

I recently went to the CSDP Operations Headquarters activated in Postdam, for the 3rd comprehensive Multi-Layer Crisis Management Exercise, also known as ML16.

ML16 exercised the different layers of EU crisis response and management, from the political-strategic level to the operational level.

The increasingly complex challenges that the EU is called to face through its CSDP interventions require an enhanced integration between military and civilian components, which was the case during the exercise involving the EEAS, including an EU Delegation, the European Commission, the relevant Council instances.

Further, as the UN remains the primary provider of international legitimacy to crisis management efforts, the relationship the EU fosters with the UN constitutes a critical political enabler for action. In this light, ML16 actively involved the United Nations to interact with EU planners during the conduct phase of the simulation.
Since the creation of the External Action Service (EEAS) there has been a strong evolution of the EU (structures, processes, procedures and concepts) reorganising external action responsibilities and enhancing internal coordination and external cooperation. Besides, the EU is currently working on the implementation of its new Global Strategy.

To be prepared, the EU needs to focus its efforts neither on a current type of crisis nor on a most future probable scenario, but on a flexible decision making and response system, capable to adapt the EU resources and capabilities rapidly into addressing any security crisis as unforeseen as it be. This is not a minor challenge as it is an integral organisational capability that needs to be considered, developed and continuously tested.

In other words the EU, as a system, needs to show its maturity in defence and security terms, to carry out a wide CFSP/CSDP action which may require the coordination of all its instruments.

Under the EU Exercise Policy (officially approved in 2013), Crisis Management Multilayer series exercises are designed to challenge the EU politico-military and strategic-operational level. These exercises, carried out every two years, are the most complex of their kind in the EU.

Once the CM procedures were validated and approved in June 2013 (Suggestions for Crisis Management Procedures for CSDP Crisis Management Operations), Multilayer 2014 (ML14), aimed to specifically improve internal CSDP Civ-Mil collaborative planning by exercising a joint CMC (Crisis Management Concept) and coordinated parallel Civ-Mil CONOPS. This exercise shily integrated new concepts still under development as “Cyber”, “Train and Equip” as well as CFSP specific tools as the activation of the Civil Protection Mechanism (ECHO).

Having improved the way to use the EU CM procedures, integrated CFSP components, performed internal Civ-Mil planning and tested new concepts, the challenges to face in Multilayer 2016 (ML16) needed to be much more ambitious.

ML16, recently conducted, has improved CFSP/CSDP cooperation to address a complex crisis while interacting with other international organisations. To achieve this, a new scenario was designed using the framework of a Security/Defence Sector Reform, following a Demobilisation Disarmament and Reintegration (DDR). This framework has been the test tube to integrate EU CSDP-CFSP, involving the Commission tools, while including the external approach through EU-UN cooperation.

Some novelties have appeared in ML16, to challenge the training audience, among these:

- Hybrid environment (including a strong cyber component supported by ENISA and EDA),
- Planning interaction between an EU delegation and the CSDP missions (EU citizens’ evacuation contingency framework),
- Testing of the Crisis Response Mechanism Concept
- Joint EU-UN strategic planning in the domain of SSR/DSR.

Conclusions:
The nature and rapid evolution of international security threats challenge the EU as a security provider.

Obviously, we may not evolve as fast as real crisis do, but while getting prepared we close the gap. Exercising is an essential component of the EU effort to ensure a timely flexible and coherent response to any type of external crisis, through the coordinated and synergic use of all available EU instruments and effective teams’ interaction. ML Crisis Management Exercises are consequently an excellent indicator of the organisation’s capacity to evolve and confront new policies to new scenarios.
For this issue, we have met the Commander of the EU Training Mission (EUTM) in Central African Republic, Major General Eric HAUTECLOQUE-RAYSZ (France).

Sir, could you explain to our readers the role of the EUTM-RCA?

EUTM-RCA has been invited by the newly elected government of CAR to conduct the reform and the rebuilding of its National Army, which was wiped out during the political-military crisis of 2013. With the support of the international community, led by the MINUSCA, CAR organised democratic elections and Mr. TOUADERA was elected President in February 2016. However, the recovery is still threatened by armed groups and in CAR like everywhere else, there can be no development without security. Hence, EUTM-RCA is part of the EU’s comprehensive approach, which combines security and development. EUTM builds upon the success of the CSDP missions EUFOR, which contributed to the stabilization of Bangui, and EUMAM, which started the reform of the Army. EUTM works hand-in-hand with the EU Delegation, and fully fits into the frame of the international community in CAR. EUTM works towards a modernised, effective, ethnically balanced and democratically accountable National Army. It supports CAR government in the undertaking of the Defence sector reform (DSR), within the frame of the security sector reform (SSR). For that purpose, EUTM simultaneously works on three pillars. Of course, it provides education to NCOs and officers, and operational training to the units, with the aim of two to three battalions trained within the two years of its initial mandate. But EUTM also provides strategic advice to CAR’s political and military authorities (Presidency, Ministry of Defence and General Staff) to set up efficient chains of command and control, new management and adapted support.

What drives you to achieve your objectives?

My team and I arrived in CAR with no predetermined technical objectives; we made a state of play and adapted to CAR’s culture and reality. We work for the benefit of the soldiers, to give them back their dignity and their pride to serve their country and their people. They show great motivation, even if it is a huge task. The government and the population need their army back. It is the backbone of the institutions, alongside the interior security forces and other law enforcement agents, and the judicial system. Each in its specific role must accompany the restoration of the State on the territory.

What are your recent achievements?

EUTM raises strong expectations and is very popular among our partners, at political, military and population grounds. At a strategic level, the Minister of Defence adopted a roadmap to conduct reforms in the fields of force employment, human resources, budget, training, logistic, CIS, etc., implemented by joint working groups. We also helped the MoD to prepare the Brussel’s donors conference for CAR planned on 17th November. On field, the operational training was officially launched by the President in the camp of Kassaï, in Bangui. The soldiers of the first battalion started to train with weapons, which were previously forbidden by the embargo. With the support of international donors, we also started concrete developments projects for the benefit of the Army, such as agro-pastoral units and craft workshops, which will ensure its autonomy while allowing volunteers to convert to civil life, thus facilitating the cleansing of the troops. We have a wide range of action, but we must be realistic: it will take at least a decade before the army is fully operational. The achievements of EUTM, whose mode of operation sums up in military cooperation for the Defence sector, depend on the acceptance and appropriation of the CAR counterparts.
EUFOR ALTHEA

EUFOR troops, from the Multinational Battalion consisting of Austrian and Turkish soldiers, Armed Forces BiH, Intermediate Reserve Soldiers from the United Kingdom and the Tactical Manoeuvre Battalion from KFOR with Hungarian and Portuguese soldiers, conducted Exercise Quick Response 2016, an intense military training at Brigade level from 1 to 5 October at a large exercise ground located in the hilly area of Manjaca, BiH.
